behind the scenes

backstage at HGTV Star

Meet the winners of the HGTV Magazine design challenge and find out why their living room came out on top.

Editor in chief Sara Peterson and HGTV Star host David Bromstad give the designers a makeover challenge.

This is the second year in a row that I've delivered a design challenge to the HGTV Star contestants, and let me tell you, it's a rush! My heart pounds and my stomach does flip-flops when host and mentor David Bromstad introduces me and I see how much energy each designer brings. This season the designers had 48 hours to decorate a living room in a luxury rental unit at the Icis Apartment Homes in Glendale, CA. No permanent changes—like knocking down walls or ripping up floors—were allowed. In the end Brooks Alwood and Tiffany Brooks created the winning look, at night. What swayed the judges most? "They made this room feel special," says David. "The graphic walls and teal and orange palette gave edge to what could have been a bland space."

STEAL THEIR WINNING IDEAS

Mix up seating styles

"We wanted to give this room plenty of seating, but we didn't want to play it safe with a sectional," says Brooks. So he and Tiffany brought in a tufted leather sofa and a pair of orange arm chairs.

Add lightweight curtains

Chunky leather and metal accents can feel weighty in a living area, so the design team decided on airy floor-to-ceiling sheer curtains and an open-base coffee table to lighten up the room.

Stripe the accent wall

Brooks taped off horizontal stripes of different sizes on the light gray wall, then painted the stripes a dark gray. "That's a way to add a punch without doing anything too drastic," he says.

Put color on the floor, too

The chairs may be a bold orange, but that doesn't mean the flooring has to be neutral. Tiffany picked a patchwork rug for the space. "The blues are soft so they don't compete with the chairs," she says.
